Jacob McCarty

RESEARCH FELLOW AND PROGRAM OFFICER

Jacob McCarty joined the American Foreign Policy Council in January 2019 as a Research Fellow and Program Officer. He currently serves as the Managing Editor of the Council's World Almanac of Islamism project. Prior to joining AFPC, Jacob conducted research into defense acquisition reform, force modernization, international trade, global cities, and African politics for a number of policy institutions, and oversaw several development projects on two continents.

A graduate of Ohio University, he has lived in North Africa and the South Pacific. He is currently a Master's degree candidate at Missouri State University's Department of Defense & Strategic Studies, where his final thesis will examine future demographic trends and their impact on U.S. foreign policy and international institutions. He is proficient in the French language.
